IT BEING DEEMED EXPEDIENT to issue a selection announcement for the awarding of no. 1 research grants.
HEREBY DECREES

Art. 1 - Purpose

A selection announcement has been published for the awarding of 1 research grants for the research project entitled “The Effects of changes in Accounting Regulation on the Volatility of Regulatory Capital and Bank Lending” to be conducted at the Department of Economics and Management “Marco Fanno” under the supervision of Professor Amedeo Pugliese, who is the Research Project Supervisor.

The research grant, which shall last for 24 months and be for a gross amount of 22.797,55 euros per annum, is issued in accordance with the current Regulations Governing Research Grant Awards and Art. 22 of Law no. 240/2010 for the aforementioned research project, in University Scientific Area no. 15 - Economics and Statistics (Economics / CUN Area 13 Economics and Statistics) and Scientific Sectors and Disciplines SECS-P07.

The purpose of this research grant, which is funded by “The Effects of changes in Accounting Regulation on the Volatility of Regulatory Capital and Bank Lending”, is to fund research that is structured as follows:

Since 2018 a significant change to accounting rules (e.g. IFRS 9) has occurred, with its effects becoming visible in financial statements available by mid-2019. Changes in accounting standards have been prompted by the global financial crisis (2008) and the sovereign debt crisis in Europe (2010-2011); indeed the incurred loss model adopted in the valuation of losses on loans and receivables (e.g. IAS 39) was held responsible for banks’ untimely recognition of losses in their financial statements. The infamous adage “too little, too late” reflects this view. Regulators, standard setters and bankers called for accounting rules allowing a timelier recognition of loan losses, without waiting until debtors’ bankruptcy prior to writing down the loans. This project aims at complementing early evidence by seeking to address the following research questions: (i) do the application of expected credit loss model- in lieu of incurred credit loss model- and, (ii) the disappearance of the prudential filters arising of distinction between available-for-sale (AFS) and held-for-trading (HFT) affect the volatility of regulatory capital and bank lending?

This project seeks to answer two research questions, partly overlapping. Due to data availability, it is reasonable foreseeing that the first part of the project (Q4/2019-Q3/2020) will focus on the effects of the prudential filters on bank lending, whilst in the second part (Q4/2020-Q3/2021) the focus will shift on the relationship between Loan-Loss Provision, Regulatory Capital and Bank Lending.

Part A: The Effects of Prudential Filters on Bank Lending

The first part of the research project will substantiate the debate surrounding the importance of having (removing) prudential filters. It will seek to answer two questions: (i) do banks rely on the accounting-based information (e.g. equity and other comprehensive income) vis-à-vis regulatory capital- in their lending decisions? And (ii) do banks exploit the different country-level arrangements in relation to prudential filters in their credit allocation?

Part B: Loan-Loss Provisioning, Regulatory Capital and Bank Lending
The second part of the research project will focus on effects of the adoption of the expected credit loss (ECL) model (following IFRS 9) on the volatility of income and regulatory capital, and banks lending behaviours. This is similar in spirit to the ECB’s initial assessment of the impact of IFRS 9 on European banks (EBA, 2016 & 2017), although it differs in noticeable ways: while the ECB was concerned with estimating the quantitative impact on CET 1 and regulatory ratios, given the current state of banks’ investments and financing, this project will exploit bank-level heterogeneity along some key dimension (e.g. size, complexity, governance) to assess the effects of ECDL on bank regulatory capital and lending.

At the end of the research period the expected results concern:

Short-Term Goal 1.1:

Provide evidence that even under the incurred loss model a significant degree of subjectivity existed in terms of timeliness of loan loss provisions. In fact, based on the results of the asset quality review performed by EBA (2013) we shall be able to document a significant heterogeneity and different behaviours of banks, and provide evidence that a number of bank-level characteristics could help predicting timeliness.

Short-Term Goal 1.2:

Providing first-hand evidence in terms of how some of the most salient attributes of banks (e.g. size, governance, complexity) will enable or curtail the timely recognition of impaired loans, thus affecting the effectiveness of ECL models. Relying on internal bank level data (provided in conjunction with the University of Bolzano) we shall document how the effectiveness of an ECL rests on a bank’s ability to detect deterioration in debtors’ condition (a technical issue) as well as the willingness to disclosure and anticipate the (unrealised) loss in the financial statements (an incentive-related issue). This short-term goal has practical implications for banks in their operations as well as for regulatory institutions when performing their supervisory duties.

Art. 2 - Admissions requirements
